What You Should Know

If you are a family member or significant other of an individual with a serious mental illness and provide care and/or support to him/her, it is important for you to know about laws which relate to the sharing of information about your loved one with a mental health challenge:

- Information you may wish to share with persons who are providing treatment or are involved professionally with him/her; and
- Information about your loved one you would like to have treatment providers share with you.

PROVIDING INFORMATION TO TREATMENT PROVIDERS AND OTHER DESIGNATED PERSONS

RUHS—Behavioral Health recognizes and appreciates the support provided by family members and/or significant others to individuals with serious mental illness and welcomes information provided by them to staff members in an effort to promote and assist in their loved one's recovery.

In 2002, legislation (AB-1424) was passed which modified California statutes relating to family members and/or significant others in the course of the commitment/involuntary treatment process (Section 5150 of the California Welfare & Institutions Code).

Prior to the passage of AB-1424, information provided by family members in making a determination as to whether the ill family member met the criteria to be involuntarily (against his/her wishes) committed to a mental health facility was not considered.

An individual with serious mental illness may be committed involuntarily ONLY if he/she meets one or more of the following criteria:

- Danger to himself/herself;
- Danger to others;
- Gravely Disabled (unable to provide for his/her basic needs such as food, clothing, and shelter).

AB-1424 mandates that information provided by family members/significant others SHALL be considered when making a determination as to whether the ill family member meets the criteria to be involuntarily committed to a mental health facility. This includes information relating to past circumstances such as whether he/she has a history of violence (danger to himself/herself and/or others) and/or numerous prior hospitalization commitments.

The information provided by family members and/or significant others may be in verbal or written form. Family members who knowingly give false information may be liable to their loved one in a civil action. In addition, facilities must make every reasonable effort to make information provided by family members/significant others available to the court (written is recommended).

If you are unsure as to what type of information you should provide, RUHS—Behavioral Health has developed two forms for the use of family members/significant others.

They are:

- Information Provided by Family Member; and
- Information Provided by Family Member - History of Crisis Episodes.

To obtain copies of these forms, please contact the Family Advocate Program at (800) 330-4522. Please keep in mind that it is NOT REQUIRED that family members or significant others use these forms or any other specific format. Also, information provided by family members or significant others may be in verbal form.

RECEIVING INFORMATION FROM TREATMENT PROVIDERS

In terms of family members or significant others receiving information FROM treatment providers, it is important to note that California confidentiality statutes prohibit treatment providers from sharing information about individuals with serious mental illnesses with family members or significant others without the written consent of the ill individual (Release of Information).

However, in an effort to comply with confidentiality statutes as well as facilitate the sharing of information between treatment providers and family members or significant others, RUHS—Behavioral Health revised its policies and procedures in 2001 (RUHS - Behavioral Health Brochure “Confidentiality Guidelines for Caregivers”). If you would like a copy of this brochure explaining these revisions, please contact the Family Advocate Program at (800) 330-4522.
